AN AGRICULTURAL OFFICE OPENED

Mr. G. B. Curran announces that he has opened an office for the Ont. Dept. of Agriculture in the Merchant's Bank Building. All farmers are invited to call and get in touch with the new Representative. The office is fitted up as a reading and farmers club room. Copies of all the agricultural papers are on the reading table and are at the use of anyone wishing to read them. A complete list of bulletins and reports issued by the Ont. Agricultural College is on hand and are free for the asking. Farmers are asked to use the rooms freely.

The Ont. Dept. of Agriculture now has 30 permanent offices in 30 counties in Ontario, and 4 temporary offices in New Ontario for the summer of 1912. It is the intention to open an office in every county in Ontario. Many counties were disappointed this year, although 8 new offices were opened. The work of the District Representatives is to bring the Agricultural College in closer touch with the farmer. The following is an outline of the work:

Two months short course in Agriculture, held in the Collegiate Institute, during January and February, for farmers' sons who are unable to attend the Agricultural College; a practical course.

Short course in live stock and seed judging—A two day's course identical with the same course held at Ont. Agricultural College, for every farmer in the district, irrespective of age. Judges are supplied from Guelph and Toronto.

Demonstration orchards—Orchards will be taken over in different parts of the country and cared for at least 2 or 3 seasons to demonstrate what can be done by correct pruning, spraying and cultivation. Net returns of over $200 per acre have been obtained from orchards under the care of the District Representatives.

Experiments with alfalfa and ensilage corn will be carried on.

Drainage work—Assistance will be given to any farmer who wishes to tile drain his land.

Besides the above, Mr. Curran is ready to assist in organizing Farmers Clubs, Cow-Testing Associations, to identify weeds and weed-seeds, injurious insects and fungous diseases.

Samples of such should be brought into the office.

CLOVER AND GRASS SEED PROSPECTS POOR

The indications are that the clover and timothy seed crop will be a partial failure this year in Ontario, and that clover and grass seed will be higher in price next winter than even last season. Every farmer who has clean meadows would do well to harvest them for seed, as the seed will bring greater returns than the hay.

DENBIGH.

Your correspondent has taken his vacation a little ahead of the regular time and enjoyed three weeks visiting relatives and friends in Berlin, Waterloo, New Hamburg and Linwood. He also attended the 57th annual session of the Lutheran Synod of Canada as delegate from May 30th to June 3rd. The sessions were attended by 45 ministers and 34 lay delegates representing congregations connected with the Synod and several visiting clergymen representing other Lutheran Synods in Nova Scotia, Manitoba, the English Lutheran Synod of Central Canada and the United States. A missionary just arrived from India was also present and gave a very interesting description of that country.

The vacancy caused here by the removal of Rev. John Reble to Linwood could not be filled, though a lately ordained minister is expected soon to arrive from Germany who is intended for it. Rev. G. Dachselt, of Rankin, conducted service here on the 2nd inst., and Rev. P. Kleim, of Pembroke, will conduct the service here next Sunday forenoon.

Messrs. J. S. Lane, E. C. Bebee, A. Lockwood and Ed. Petzold are away at North Bay engaged in building operations.

Mr. Al. Lane who has been river driving in New Ontario just arrived home again.

Chas. Wienecke has bought a 200 acre farm near this village from Mrs. E. Stein, and moved on it.

Mr. J. Adams, of Kingston, is enjoying a good visit here with Dr. and Mrs. Jos. Adams.

Mrs. Chas. Both is spending a couple of weeks visiting relatives and friends in Kingston.

The Misses Susan and Louise Bartsch, of Kingston, have arrived on a visit to their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bartsch.

Miss Clara Fritsch, of New York, is paying a good visit at her parental home here.

Mr. Fred Wensley, of Wensley, conducted the entrance examinations at our village school last week.

Mr. Oscar Chatson is in the Brockville hospital where he underwent an operation for appendicitis. Harry Chatson, eldest son of Mr. Wm. Chatson, was afflicted with the same disease and was taken to the same hospital.

failure this year in Ontario, and that clover and grass seed will be higher in price next winter than even last season. Every farmer who has clean meadows would do well to harvest them for seed, as the seed will bring greater returns than the hay.

HARVESTING TIMOTHY SEED

Every farmer who has a piece of timothy meadow should be able to procure enough clean seed for his own use, at least, even if it is an exceptionally busy time to look after weeds. The time is at hand for making timothy hay. Now that the timothy is in head, a small area of from one half acre to an acre, may be picked out in the field where it is the cleanest and headed out the best. If Ox-Eye Daisy, Mustard, Catchfly or other noxious or common weeds are present, now is the time to remove them before they go to seed.

The timothy seed is usually fit to cut in fall wheat and barley harvest. One of the best ways is to cut the stubble high with a binder. It should not be left until too ripe before cutting, as a lot of the seed will shake out of the heads and the birds will take quite a toll when it shells easily. It may be cut with a cradle or reaping machine and bound by hand. In this case it should be cut when damp with dew. After standing in the shock a few days it may be hauled in and stored. If very ripe at the time of cutting it may be hauled in almost immediately after cutting.

The threshing is usually done with the ordinary threshers. If the seed be very ripe and dry when cut a good deal of the hulls shell off. The clover huller should never be used in threshing timothy seed as it hulls too badly. Flail threshed timothy produces fancy show seed and usually brings the fancy prices.

Timothy seed grown on even dirty land may be kept comparatively free from some kinds of weed seed that would otherwise be present by cutting the timothy with high stubble. Other weeds may be hand pulled or spudded out. Ox-Eye Daisy, False Flax, Canada Thistle and Catchfly are among the most prevalent noxious weeds. Good screening will clean out most of the other weeds found in timothy seed. Catchfly is one of the weeds most frequently found in alsike and often present in quantity. It can easily be pulled. Ribgrass and Buckhorn is found sometimes in timothy and alsike, but is more prevalent in red clover. Ribgrass and Ragweed seeds are hard to separate from red clover seed, as are also seeds of Bladder Campion and Green Foxtail. These weeds should be hand pulled or spudded from the seed crop. Ribgrass may easily be noticed four or five days after mowing the first crop. Thin and killed out places in the fields should be mowed early with a synthet to prevent the weeds from seeding.

For any further information in regard to clover and timothy seed, or the identification of weeds, farmers are invited to apply to Mr. G. B. Curran, who has recently opened a Branch Office of the Ontario Dept. of Agricultural in Napanee for the counties of Lennox and Addington. All information is free. The office is in the Merchant's Bank Building.

Re-Nu-All Wood Polish.

An antiseptic wood polish, kills germs and microbes with which the air we breath is infected, at the same time imparting a brilliant gloss to everything which it is applied, at B YLE & SON'S.

Half mad with anger and the bitterness borne of the situation, he caught up a bit of a branch of a tree which he had been using, and made to strike Vane across the face, but Vane, dropping his gun, caught Sutcombe's arm and averted the blow. Sutcombe endeavored to wrench himself from the steel-like grasp; and almost before they knew it the two men were struggling. They were equally matched in strength and skill, but the gun, which they had disregarded, played a third hand. One of the men must have stepped on the trigger, for there was a flash and report, and, half blinded, Sutcombe felt Vane's grip relax and saw him stagger back.

CHAPTER XXIII.

In an instant the madness of anger passed from Sutcombe's brain and remorsefully he supported the man whom a moment or two before he had been endeavoring to throw.

"Are you hurt?" he asked, anxiously.

Vane tried to smile and answer in the negative, but before he could do so he fainted. Sutcombe laid him down and, getting out a brandy flask, managed to get some spirit through the clenched teeth; and presently, to his immense relief, the wounded man came to.

"I'm afraid you're badly hurt!" said Sutcombe. "I am very sorry! It was an accident. One of us trod on the gun—"

"I know, I know!" said Vane, promptly, though faintly. "The bullet—fortunately it was a bullet and not shot!—struck me in the shoulder. There's—there's no great harm done. A little more brandy, please! Thank you! If you can help me to the boat—it's no great distance—a drink of water and I shall be well enough to manage it—there is something with which we can get the bullet out, if it's there still."

Sutcombe got some water in his panikin and Vane took a long pull and struggled to his feet.

"I can get some help if you could wait," suggested Sutcombe; but Vane frowned and shook his head.

"No need. If you will give me your arm—Thanks! We are all right now!"

The distance from the scene of the tragedy to the boat seemed interminable to Sutcombe, more so probably than it did to Vane, who was only weak and not in pain; but they got there at last, and Vane, throwing himself down on the beach, told Sutcombe where to find in the boat the things he wanted.

The yawl was a trim little vessel with an apology for a cabin roughly but ingeniously fitted up for its solitary skipper. And Sutcombe saw at a glance that it was the boat and cabin of a gentleman. He found the small leather case of instruments and some bandages, and he quickly had Vane's shoulder bare.

"The bullet has gone through the flesh and out in an upward direction; it's a clean wound," he said.

"So I thought," said Vane. "If you can stop the bleeding—it's not the first time you have rendered 'first aid,' I see, Lord Sutcombe," he added, as Sutcombe deftly stanching the blood and bandaged the wound.

"I will—on one condition," he said. "That you give me your word of honor that the lady I call Miss Wood has no cause of complaint against you."

Sutcombe considered for a moment or two.

Vane looked surprised. "I assent to your condition, Lord Sutcombe. She has none. I have not willingly injured the lady in word or thought or deed. There is my hand on it!"

Sutcombe took it and nodded gravely.

"There is some mystery which I cannot solve," he said in a low voice. "But I believe you and trust you. But you cannot sail at once, you are not fit. The risk—oh, it is impossible! Remain here until tomorrow. I will come about noon, and if I find that you are well enough—well!" he shrugged his shoulders.

After a while Vane reluctantly agreed to the arrangement.

"Now, I don't want to seem inhospitable," he said, "but isn't it time you got back to the ladies? They will be anxious about you."

When Sutcombe had gone Vane sat with his chin on his hands, gazing before him; the bitterness that welled up in his heart reflected in his eyes.

He thought he saw it all so plainly. This man, with the frank blue eyes and pleasant manner, was evidently in love with Nina, and she—of course she returned his love. Why not? Was he not the sort of young fellow any girl might love? And he, Vane, stood between them; in short, barred their happiness and wrecked their lives. It was the irony of fate that he should be doomed to be the marplot, the obstacle to other persons' happiness. He had stood between Julian and the Lesborough peerage; he had stood between Julian and Judith. But he had, by the aid of Chance, effaced himself in their case. Could he not efface himself in this one? Why not? He pondered, with an increasing bitterness, for hours, and at last he arrived at something like a decision. He still felt faint with the loss of blood, and very tired, and, lying down, with his arm for a pillow, he fell asleep.

Sutcombe had promised to return by five, but he did not arrive, and as the half hours dragged on with no sight of him, the girls, Vivienne especially, grew uneasy.

"Do you think anything could have happened to him?" she said anxiously. "He is usually so careful not to be late, knowing that we should be alarmed. Think of him all alone there, dear!"

"I don't think anything has happened to him," said Nina; but I will soon find out."

"Decima! You wouldn't go out there alone!" exclaimed Vivienne fearfully and yet half wistfully.

"Why not?" said Nina, with a smile. "I have often been as far on the island alone, and I am not afraid; indeed, there is nothing to be afraid of. We three are alone here, and there are no animals more wild than the ducks and the poor turtles. Of course I shall go—no, you could not come, it would be too far. I shall probably meet Lord Sutcombe close at home. Don't let the stew burn while I am away!" she added with a laugh as she left the saloon.

She walked quickly toward the valley, and would have met Sutcombe if he had been returning from the spot at which he had been working, but he was coming from the direction of the coast, and so she missed him. When she reached the working and found that he was not there, cause—and remove it," he said, grimly. "May I speak quite candidly? Oh, what is the use of our beating about the bush! We are both thinking of what happened on this island. You were the victim of a cruel fate, Nina, a fate I appreciated. I—I strove to avert. You will do me the justice to acknowledge that, won't you? But I have kept my promise, the promise you asked of me. No one knows of our—marriage."

She turned her face from him and looked straight before her.

"I, too, have kept my promise," she said, in a low voice.

He nodded. "I knew you would—for your own sake," he said, not at all gratefully. "It was poor Fleming's doing entirely. Mind! I bear him no ill will. He acted according to his lights. And—and, after all, there is no harm done—I mean that it can be undone."

She looked at him for a second and waited.

"Since Lord Sutcombe left me," he went on, "I have been thinking of the—the tie that binds us two, and I've come to the conclusion that it—the marriage—was invalid; anyhow, that it would not stand good unless we were married again."

The blood threatened to rise to her pale face, but she kept it down.

"If you remember, poor Fleming said that we might go through the ceremony again if we escaped from the island, when we got to a port—"

She made the faintest gesture of assent with her hand.

"Therefore, in Heaven's name, why should you be bound to me by so frail and intangible a bond?" he broke out, sharply. "I know how you must long for your freedom; you would do so in any case; but now—"

Her brows knit as if she were trying to understand this.

"And—and I admit that you have the right to be free; that, indeed, it would be a shameful thing to hold you by a chain which fettered you against your will."

She made no sign of assent or dissent, and, stringing himself up to the necessary pitch of self-sacrifice, he went on, huskily:

"Fleming gave you a kind of certificate? You have got it still?"

She made a movement of her hand in the affirmative.

"I shall part us!"

Then she spoke the word; reluctantly enough, for love's voice was clamouring to her, "Be satisfied! He loves you."

"Judith!"

He started slightly and stared down into her eyes with amazement and a dawning recollection.

"Judith?" he echoed.

"Yes," she breathed. "I—I found her portrait in your coat pocket. A beautiful, a lovely woman. I saw her in a box at the theatre in London. Yes; Judith!"

He gazed, questioningly, anxiously into her eyes, half dazed for a moment; then he laughed. And the laugh was almost sweeter in her ears than his words of passionate love and longing.

"Judith! Judith Orme! You found her portrait! I had forgotten it; forgotten her!"

The warm blood flooded Nina's face and she drew a long sigh of relief.

"Judith? I thought I was in love with her! In love! I did not know what it meant till I met you, Nina, my dearest, my—wife!"

His arms closed round her again. "I had forgotten her! Judith!" he laughed again. "She is going to be married—is married by this time to—to another man! Judith! And you thought—"

Nina's eyes overflowed, with the glad tears. Oh, it is well for women that they can weep, even in their joy!

"What else could I think? And—and you don't care for her now?" she faltered, like any girl in her teens, woman as she was.

He threw back his head and laughed again, the laugh that was such sweet music to her.

"You only, dearest," he said. "And you never guessed it! Ah, well, if you could have seen me when I found you had gone on that infernal raft; if you could have seen me when its remains floated ashore with your cap! The dear little cap! Oh, Nina! I was mad with grief; I have been more than half mad since. All the world could not console me for the loss of you! And all the time you were thinking I was in love with—Judith!"

"Forgive me!" she murmured. "But what else could I think?—her ness. He—he is a good fellow; I am sure of that, and he—no—" The words stuck in his throat; he could not go any further.

Nina stood with bent head, her eyes flashing, the blood running fiercely through her veins. He had spoken as if it were her freedom he desired, but was he not craving for his own, that he might be free to marry —Judith? At that moment she saw the portrait as plainly as she had seen it when it had been actually in her hand; and, her heart racked with jealousy and wounded, outraged love, she could utter no word. Suddenly she turned from him and took from her bosom the certificate and the ring that was wrapped in it, and held them out to him.

"There they are," she said, with an unnatural calm.

Vane took them from her outstretched hand and looked at them for a moment as if he saw nothing.
Then, without a word, he lit one of the matches Sutcombe had given him and held it to a corner of the paper.
But, as he did so, something seemed to catch his breath, and, half choking, he flung the match from him, crushed the certificate and ring in his hand and springing towards her caught her in his arms.

Through a mist of tears she saw his face, white to the lips and stern, almost savage, in its passion. Amazed she struggled faintly in his grasp, but he held her so tightly as almost to crush her.

"No!" he cried, hoarsely. "I won't do it! I can't! You are my wife; do you hear? I don't care whether the ceremony was valid or not, I hold you to it! You are my wife! My wife! Do you understand?
You married me for better or for worse; I refuse to release you. I hold you to your vow. I refuse to give you up to any man. Do you understand?"

Her eyes closed, the languor of surrender stole over her; but she fought against it, though the pressure of his arms, the fierce, passionate words were sending the blood surging through her veins in a happy flood. But though she loved him with a love that threatened to sweep away every barrier, she was a woman and not a child, and she remembered. So she held her face from the pillow—his heart—which it craved, and retained possession of her soul.

"Why did you fly from me—risk your life rather than stay with me?"
he demanded, masterfully. "Did you dislike me so much? Where you so afraid of me? Could you not trust me? No matter! I don't care to know! You are my wife! I hold you to your vow, your promise.
Nina! I love you! I loved you then; I've loved you all the time we've been parted. I love you now, and, by God, I'll hold you! Nothing for the loss of you! And all the time you were thinking I was in love with—Judith!"

"Forgive me!" she murmured.
"But what else could I think?—her portrait, there in your coat, over your heart!—and knowing, that you had been forced into the marriage—"—
"I loved you then, before then!"
he said, earnestly. "It was on your account that I hesitated, pleaded with Fleming, made the raft. I thought you disliked me, and I loved you too well to get you against your will."

"How blind we were!" she murmured, regretfully; for how much their blindness had cost them!

"Blind as young puppies! But our eyes are opened now, dearest! It is all right!"

"Your shoulder, your wound— Do you remember the fight with the Lascar?" she whispered, with a shudder.

"Yes, and how gently you dressed the wound; you little guessed how the touch of your dear fingers thrilled through me!" he responded. "My beautiful!" He gazed into her eyes, raised shyly but lovingly to his.
"To think of your being a literary swell! A dramatic author! And to think of my looking on at the play, and not knowing that my dear, clever wife had written it! My wife!
Nina, you haven't kissed me yet!
Kiss me now! Just that I may realize that you are actual flesh and blood, and not one of the visions of you that have come to me so of-

She raised her head and kissed him, and did not tell him that she had already done so!

HAPPY THO' MARRIED?

There are unhappy married lives, but a large percentage of these unhappy homes are due to the illness of the wife, mother or daughter. The feelings of nervousness, the befogged mind, the ill-temper, the pale and wrinkled face, hollow and circled eyes, result most often from those disorders peculiar to women. For the woman to be happy and good-looking she must naturally have good health. Dragging-down feelings, hysteria, hot-flashes or constantly returning pains and aches—are too great a drain upon a woman's vitality and strength. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores weak and sick women to sound health by regulating and correcting the local disorders which are generally responsible for the above distressing symptoms.

MRS. DICKOVER.

"I suffered greatly for a number of years and for the past three years was so bad that life was a misery to me," writes Mrs. E. F. DICKOVER, of Utica, Ohio, Route 4. "The doctors told me I would have to go to a hospital before I would ever be better. A year ago this winter and spring I was worse than ever before. At each period I suffered like one in torment. I am the mother of six children. I was so bad for five months that I knew something must be done, so I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce, telling him as nearly as I could how I suffered. He outlined a course of treatment which I followed to the letter. I took two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and a fifty-cent bottle of 'Smart-Weed,' and have never suffered much since. I wish I could tell every suffering woman the world over what a boon Dr. Pierce's medicines are. There is no use wasting time and money doctoring with anything else or any one else."

The Medical Adviser by R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y., answers hosts of delicate questions about which every woman, single or married ought to know. Sent free on receipt of 50 stamps to pay for wrapping and mailing only.

WASHING THE CARPET.

Avoid Trouble by Not Beginning at the Door.

To wash the carpet thoroughly you will require a bucket of warm water, a cake of carpet soap, a piece of house flannel and, if you are going to tackle a fair sized piece of carpet at once, a supply of dry cloths.

Do not begin near the door, as you may require to leave the room for fresh water, and it is unwise to walk on the carpet when damp. Make up your mind to do without the room till it is dry. Start washing as far from the door as possible and work toward it. The flannel is wetted and a portion of the carpet well rubbed. It must not be overdone, only wetted sufficiently to secure a good lather by rubbing the carpet soap ball well in. Then with the clean, wet flannel remove the soap. Well rinse the flannel afterward, so that it is quite soapless when you begin another fresh piece.

No soap must be left in the carpet when the final rubbing commences. Take a dry towel and rub your best, though you cannot get rid of all dirt, less, you can almost dry the patch with friction, and this brings up the nap beautifully, also the colors.

Toronto Globe—Sir James Whitney's friends are predicting that he will make a late repentance on Mr. Rowell's policy of "abolish the bar." The theoretical attitude and the practical work in New Toronto have made the public suspicious of Conservative deliberations on the liquor question.

Toronto Globe—The Deputy Attorney-General should be able to say whether there was any difficulty or undue delay in issuing a warrant for the arrest of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt. Inspector Duncan's statements that Crown Attorney Corley was applied to for a warrant two weeks before it was issued are too explicit to be ignored.

Lethbridge Herald—Southern Alberta wool-growers are being offered above six cents less than their cousins across the line are getting. And yet the woollen manufacturers in the east are complaining that the duty on woollen goods is not high enough. Hon. Stratford Beacon—The Tory new idea seems to be that the easier the way is made for the United States manufacturer to send his goods into Canada the better for our loyalty. But to expedite the sale by a Canadian farmer of a beef, a sheep, a lamb or a hog, a pound of butter or cheese, or a whisk of hay would be to bring about annexation. Queer, isn't it?

Windsor Free Press—The law cannot govern or control consciences, but it can make marriage a contract entered into in the presence of a person authorized to bind its terms upon the man and woman entering into it so that the civil rights of husband, wife and children are all safeguarded, the legitimacy of the children being made secure beyond possible question.

Vancouver Province—An Ontario man is asking the courts to annul his marriage on the ground that he was insane when the ceremony was performed. Some men are crazy to get married, while others develop brain and other storms after. It would shatter the whole social fabric if temporary mental eccentricity should be legally recognized as an excuse for escaping marital responsibility.

St. Thomas Journal—A member of the party of British manufactures who are touring Canada was guilty of a gross breach of etiquette when he declared, at a Government banquet in Ottawa, that Canada narrowly escaped a calamity, referring to the reciprocity campaign. It is time we heard the last of the old libel, that those who supported reciprocity were any less loyal than those who condemned it.

Windsor Record—What is the poor Tory member of Parliament going to do? If he gives all the plums to his own supporters by finding a place or making it he is accused of running politics on the spoils system. If he takes care of a Grit friend once in a while a whole lot of disappointed office seekers accuse him of trying to wreck the party and swear to "get him" at the next election. It's a cruel, cruel world.

Montreal Herald—It is the desire of the vast majority of English-speaking Canadians that French Canada should thrive and thrive along its own lines according to the traditions which the British conquest left sacrosanct. Extremists will be found on both sides, but the great mass of people believe and wish that in the service of Canada, greater than all its component parts, we should preserve our identities and merge our energies.

Cobalt Nugget—The Government of Ontario, being a Government by party, it is highly important that both parties have a proper and definite knowledge of the important problems relating to northern Ontario. If this is provided, and it can best be secured by a personal visit to the district, the Government and Opposition, in their debates in the Legislature, can act far more intelligently, and for the best advantage, with the north country. The people of Temiskaming will heartily welcome Mr. Rowell and his fellow-Liberals, and there will be a disposition shown in the part of all the people of this district, Liberals and Conservatives alike, to make that visit pleasant and profitable.

MODISH MATTERS.

Scalloped Collars For Coats and Frocks Are Smart.

Odd shaped collars with scalloped edges are much in favor. These are worn with the one piece dress or separate blouse.

A neat little morning hat with a helmet crown and curled brim made of sapphire blue straw has a couple of lime green feathers upon it and no other trimming at all—a curious combination of dyes, but quite pleasing.

shade. On the drooping side of the crown is plastered a perfectly flat bunch of roses surrounded by leaves. The flowers look as if they had been pressed in a book.

Blazers or outing coats make very smart wraps for summer days. The blazer illustrated is exceedingly good style and is best when made of striped woolen material.

MONDAY'S CELEBRATION

On Monday Napanee celebrated Dominion Day with probably the largest crowd ever gathered in the town for any similar celebration. From early morning the people poured into the town and by noon the streets were crowded.

A splendid programme of sports was announced and faithfully carried out with the exception of the second flight of the aeroplane which the aviator refused to make on account of trouble with his engine.

The aeroplane was the principal drawing card of the day and the successful flight made by Mr. Havens delighted everyone. The aviator had perfect control of the machine which after a short run on the ground rose gracefully into the air and made a couple of circles over the park, Collegiate Institute and the open fields to the north of the park. On making the second circle his engine went wrong and Mr. Havens brought his machine to the ground in a field just north of the track.

The baseball game between Trenton and Picton was a good spirited game and resulted in a win for Picton by a score of 7 to 3.

The second game between Belleville and Napanee was also well contested and resulted in a win for Belleville by a score of 10 to 7. Large crowds surrounded the ball ground all afternoon and took keen delight in the games.

The horse races were well contested and lovers of this form of sport were amply repaid in the many excellent heats run. All the races were well filled. Following are the results :

The Mighty Haag Circus was on the ground and drew a good crowd in the afternoon but a small crowd in the evening. The side shows did a roaring business all day.

There were fully ten thousand people at the park in the afternoon and taken altogether it was the most successful Dominion Day celebration ever held in Napanee.

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she could not live. The Tablets cured her.—Mr. E. R. McBRIDE, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package. Hennequin Tablets have the letter "H" stamped upon them—this is your guarantee.

both these concerns, and finally submitted them to R. S. Kelch, electrical expert of Montreal, whose report was received by the Civic Utilities Committee on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Kelch advises that the city should accept neither proposition, and intimates that the city's present steam plant, with certain additions, can take care for a number of years of the local demand for power and can furnish it cheaper than it could if it took the supply from the Commission or the Seymour Company. Mr. Kelch's report will be adopted by the City Council, and his recommendation to the steam plant will be made this year.

LOOKING FOR A WIFE

WHOM WILL THE YOUNG PRINCE OF WALES MARRY?

The Heir to the British Crown Is the Most Desirable "Catch" In the World To-day and All the Match-makers Are Discussing the Possibilities Among the Princesses of Europe—Czar's Daughter Named.

It is the habit of royalty to mate early, and that is why the match-makers are already discussing the matrimonial possibilities for the Prince of Wales. That Edward is the most desirable "catch" in the world, even apart from his heirship to the British throne, is a point that has been brought out in the discussion, but his rank removes him from all calculations respecting ladies not of royal blood.

There have been cases of royal British princesses being married to other than princes, as, for example, the Marquis of Lorne and the Duke of Fife, but while such matches were extremely popular, it is not likely that the heir to the British throne would be permitted to wed one of his fair countrywomen, since he will be expected to marry for reasons of state rather than for reasons of sentiment.

This is not to intimate that royal marriages are not the result of affection, for very often they are true romances, but the love match is merely incidental, and while it is not likely that a royal pair would be thrust into a union absolutely hateful to them, neither would they be permitted to let their fancy rove where it pleased from cottage to castle.

There are two princesses whose names naturally occur as filling all the conditions necessary for a marriage with the heir to the British throne. One is the Grand Duchess Olga of Russia, the eldest daughter of the Czar; the other is the Princess Victoria Louise of Germany, the only daughter of the Kaiser.

The Princess Olga is about the same age as the Prince of Wales, and is said to be a very pretty girl though not such a beauty as her mother. It is thought that a match between this pair would be very gratifying to both the Dowager Empress of Russia and the Queen Mother Alexandra. From a political point of view it is believed that the match would be approved by the present Government but opposed by the Unionists who have no great fancy for further Russian alliances.

The King and Queen too it is hinted by those who are supposed to know, would not be favorably inclined, though it is not expected that they would actually oppose anything decided on by the Government. It is only natural, however, that in a matter of this sort the wishes of King George and Queen Mary would have especial weight.

As regards the German Princess, it is said that as she has been brought up with a family of brothers, who are all supposed to be anti-English, the young people would not likely be congenial. Moreover, there are political objections to still further Germanizing the British crown. That such a union would do much to wipe out the existing relations between the two countries which are far from being as cordial as might be desired, is claimed

WEALTH IN GUTTERS.

Strange Experiences Told by England's Super-Tramp.

Our everyday carelessness, and the manner in which it provides a living for vagrants, is strikingly illustrated by a chapter entitled "The Finder" in "The True Traveler," a remarkable book written by Mr. W. H. Davies, the literary tramp, who has given us such books as "Beggars" and "The Autobiography of a Super-Tramp," in addition to poetical works and a novel, and who, not from necessity, but because he loves the life, has for many years led a nomadic existence, mixing with people of the underworld in various parts of the globe.

It was in a London lodging-house that Mr. Davies met "The Finder," a man who day after day walked the streets of London with his eyes fastened on the ground, looking for things which people had lost. In a confidential moment "The Finder" showed Mr. Davies the contents of his locker in the lodging-house.

"When I saw the things he had I was astonished, for I believe this man could have made a living by merely walking about. He had several fountain pens, one gold-mounted, which must have cost thirty or forty shillings. He showed me a gold pencil-case and two silver ones; also a silver matchbox, finely embossed, which still contained the matches as it had been found. I saw several purses, all of which had contained money; and there was a lady's silk parasol, which had been left on a seat in one of the parks, and also a gentleman's costly cane found in the same way.

"He showed me several articles of jewelry, such as rings, bracelets, and brooches; and one pendant, which was a silver cross with a Christ crucified in gold, which he had found one Sunday morning in Hyde Park. Even books—popular novels that had been left on seats, some of which may not have been forgotten, but read and thrown away—were to be seen in this man's locker."

"The Finder" confessed that sometimes he went for a whole day without finding anything of the least value, but on other days he was almost certain to find a number of things. One of his methods was to visit a heath or common after a Bank Holiday, when he invariably found something of value. And he is apparently not the only one who follows this extraordinary occupation of looking for wealth on the ground, for he finds it necessary, after a Bank Holiday, to be on the spot he has in mind as soon as it is daylight, "for there are others that do the same."

The contents of his locker must have cost the owners considerably over $500. Extraordinarily enough, he never attempted to sell any of these things, for he possessed a small income which was enough to keep him, and purposely kept himself looking like the commonest beggar so that people would take less notice when they saw him stooping to pick things up.

Cockney.

There are not wanting authorities who rise to the defence of the Cockney speech, as was evidenced a year or two ago when the London County Council passed a resolution recommending measures that would drive the dialect from the schools of the English capital. Then appeared a certain Mackenzie MacBride, who put forth various pamphlets and a book would do much to wipe out the exist- ing relations between the two coun- tries which are far from being as cor- dial as might be desired, is claimed by those approving this match.

It is doubtful, however, if these hopes would be realized by a mar- riage alone, for it is to be borne in mind that the situation with regard to Germany and Britain has develop- ed with the grandson of Queen Vic- toria, the nephew of King Edward, and the cousin of King George, on the German throne, and of the Kais- er's deep affection for his grandmother there never has been any question. Moreover, the wretched experiences of the British Princess who became the Empress of Germany have not been forgotten.

Another charming princess against whom there could be no political ob- jections is the Princess Elizabeth of Roumania. This princess is the daughter of the Crown Prince and the Crown Princess of Roumania and granddaughter of the Duke of Edin- burgh, who later became Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. She has been brought up in English fashion, and her mother, "Carmen Silva," is un- doubtedly one of the most popular of the royalties that visit England, which is the land of her birth.

A union between the Roumanian and the British crowns could hardly be of great advantage from a political point of view, but, on the other hand, it would be free from the objections that might be urged against a match with either the Russian or the Ger- man princess. Princess Maud of Fife, the youngest daughter of the Princess Royal, is a lovely girl, and is mentioned among the eligibles, though she is the first cousin to the Prince of Wales.

The British Constitution debars the Prince of Wales from marrying a Roman Catholic, although it does not prevent English princesses from tak- ing Roman Catholic husbands, as was the case with the Princess Ena, who became the Queen of Spain, and abandoned her religion. In the case of the bride of the Prince of Wales it would not be enough for her to change her religion.

She must have been born and brought up a Protestant, though it does not matter what Protestant sect or denomination she has been a mem- ber of. Prince Edward himself is a shy boy of 18, and it is likely that nothing is further from his thoughts than marriage, but it is improbable that he will attain the age of 21 with- out becoming betrothed, if not wedded.

Toronto, July 2.—Publicity has now been given to the agreement, entered into in April last between the Govern- ment of Canada and the Govern- ments of the West Indian Islands who were represented, providing for a reciprocal preference on various classes of goods. In brief, the con- tracting parties agree that the cus- toms duties on goods covered by the agreement shall not exceed four-fifth of the duties imposed on similar goods of foreign origin, and right is also reserved to limit the benefit of the concession to goods conveyed di- rect without transshipment.

In general the classes of imports concerned are those peculiar to the place of origin. A preference is given by the West Indies to Canadian fish, meats, grain and other food products, live animals, agricultural machinery, boots and shoes, nails, wire and electrical appliances, canned and bottled fruits, vehicles, paper and other ar- ticles. On the other hand, Canada gives concessions on sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, petroleum, oils, rubber, tropical food products and other im- ports. The agreement is for ten years, and includes for three years the Ba- hamas, Bermuda, British Honduras, Grenada, Jamaica and Newfoundland, but this concession will cease at the expiry of that period unless they also extend reciprocal advantages to Can- ada.

This agreement shall be subject to the approval of the Parliament of Canada and of the legislatures of the above-mentioned colonies, and of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and upon such approval being given it shall be brought into operation at such time as may be agreed upon between the contracting parties by a proclamation to be published in the "Canada Gazette" and in the official gazette of each of the colonies in- volved.

measuring measures that would drive the dialect from the schools of the English capital. Then appeared a cer- tain Mackenzie MacBride, who put forth various pamphlets and a book to show that Cockney is no modern dialect or corrupted form of the King's English, but that it has an an- cient and honorable lineage running back for nearly a thousand years.

Mr. MacBride points out that when the individual "who was born within the sound of Bow Bells" says "thet" for "that," "benk" for "bank," and "byliff" for "bailiff" he is guilty of no corruption of the English language, inasmuch as these pronunciations have obtained not only in London, but in Kent and Surrey for hundreds of years.

In like manner are justified "abaht" and "ahtside" for "about" and "out- side." It is further contended that many Londoners have been laughed out of these ancient and excellent pronunciations, and Mr. McBride earnestly urges them not to change their speech by reason of any un- called-for animadversions against it.

Whether Mr. MacBride be correct or not in his contentions, the fact re- mains that Cockney has survived for many centuries in the midst of speech that is deemed more cultured.

GETTING ON IN LIFE.

Some Notable Examples of Men and Women Who Worked.

We have all seen the gentle mannered boy in a crowd, the boy that always minds his business and never quarrels. One day the crowd begins to plague him. He gets fighting mad, and makes a reputation on the spot by licking everybody in sight.

One of Walter Scott's teachers stood him up in a corner and put the dunce cap on his head.

But Scott, like the boy, waked up and licked a reputation out of the world.

The most cheerful fact in biography is this sudden change one day in the mental life of the so-called stupid young man or woman. All at once the sleepy look disappears, and the fight is on.

There once lived in the south of England a clergyman, Carter by name. His wife died from grief at having lost her little fortune in a gold brick proposition of those days called the South Sea stocks.

The clergyman was left with a family of boys and girls, one of whom, Elizabeth, was ten years old when her mother died. The father undertook to educate them alike, giving the girls the same training as the boys.

They all got along very well with their lessons except Elizabeth. Try as he would, Dr. Carter could make no headway with her. She was one of the "born-stupid" kind, and all effort to give her an education seemed useless.

After a while, as Elizabeth grew older and began to notice things, herself included, she began to get anxious. It was no great privilege to go through life as "the stupid Carter girl." That made Elizabeth mad, and she took her case in her own hands. She made up her mind that what she must do she must do by herself, so she began to study again, keeping at it late at night and beginning again early in the morning. But Elizabeth had great trouble in keeping awake—quite a stupid symptom. She fought this habit of falling asleep by taking large quantities of snuff and chewing green tea leaves.

This kept her awake, and incidentally injured her health. But it lifted the trap door, so to speak, and the light crept in.

One of her favorite studies was Greek. The great author of her times, Dr. Samuel Johnson, declared her to be the greatest Greek scholar of her time. She also learned Latin, Hebrew, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and Arabic. Stupid Elizabeth was getting on, you see.

She also learned much of astronomy and history, and she wrote poetry. Some of her poems appeared in the leading magazines and were afterward published in book form.

But her principal work was a translation of the philosophy of the Greek slave, Epictetus, which was published by subscription.

Elizabeth was still getting on. In fact, her work began to attract so much attention that the great men of her time became her friends. Among them were Johnson, Bishop Butler, Horace Walpole, Hannah More, and many others.

Through a long life (she died at 80) Elizabeth kept on doing literary work and impressing people with the power of her mind.

No one would recommend snuff and green tea as a cure for the reputation of being stupid. And they are not necessary, either. Further, no one would deny that every one of us is stupid in one way or another. The cure is to be determined to get over it, to down it, to get fighting mad and become master of the situation.

Scores of thousands of people have done it and are doing it to-day. They are striking out a line of work lasting late at night and beginning again early in the morning. That makes a long day, but a long day is better than the snuff and green tea.

If anything seems particularly hard, just say to yourself:

Elizabeth Carter got on in life, and so can I.

And you can.

The Curse of Scotland.

Among the reasons why the nine of diamonds has been called the curse of Scotland are the following:

Diamonds, nine of, called the curse of Scotland, from a Scotch member of Parliament, part of whose family arms is the nine of diamonds, voting for the introduction of the malt tax into Scotland.—"Chronology; or, The Historian's Companion," Fourth Edition, by Thomas Tegg, London, 1826.

There is a George Campbell mentioned in Burton's "History of Scotland," as having caused the nine of diamonds to be called the curse of Scotland because he stole nine diamonds out of the royal crown in the reign of Mary Stuart, in consequence of which all Scotland was taxed.

When Newton Missed His Dinner.

Sir Isaac Newton one day invited a friend to dine with him and, as usual, forgot all about it. The friend arrived and found the philosopher in a fit of abstraction. Dinner was brought up for one. The friend, without disturbing Newton, sat down and dined. When Newton recovered from his reverie he looked curiously at the empty dishes and exclaimed:

"Well, really, if it wasn't for the proof before my eyes I could have sworn that I had not yet dined."

THE PIONEER FLOUR TOWN.

By MAUDE BENSON In "Toronto Saturday Night."

During the first week of June, the eyes of all lovers of Canada's history will be turned toward the town of Napanee, where the annual meeting of the Ontario Historical Society will be held. Judging from the comments of the press of the Province upon the programme which has been prepared, this meeting will be one of the most interesting in the history of the society.

Napanee is very picturesquely situated upon the Napanee River, six miles from its confluence with the historic Bay of Quinte, to which it is accessible by large vessels. It is claimed that no other stream in Canada possesses the same number of mill privileges as does the Napanee River. There are numerous rapids and several falls along its course and the banks on either side are often very beautiful. The town is situated midway between Kingston and Belleville, on the Grand Trunk R. R. in the midst of a rich and enterprising community. In the history of towns and cities, as in Nature's laws, there is always a cause for every effect. The cause of the founding of most of our Ontario towns usually arose from some necessity of the struggling pioneers. Especially is this true as regards the founding of Napanee—the town that meant "flour" to the early settlers. In fact, some people go so far as to assert that the name, Napanee, is derived from the Indian word, Nau-pau-nee-flour, but it is very improbable, for accepting their theory, one must pre-suppose that the word flour had existed in the Indian tongue before the establishing of a flour mill at a point which had been known of Appeneea Falls, long before a flour mill was built here. In 1782-3 the first flour mill in Upper Canada was built at Kingston, by Government order, central so far as situation went, and settlers were con-much shorter for them to travel, but owing to the stress of work at the Kingston mill, it was always uncertain as to how long it would be necessary for them to wait to get their gristing done.

Some time after the completion of the mill, Clark was sent to Niagara, and the management of the business at Napanee was entrusted to Surveyor Collins, under whose direction it was operated for several years, until the mill site, together with a large tract of adjoining land, became the property of the Hon. R. Cartwright, of Kingston, grandfather of Hon. R. J. Cartwright. Mr. Cartwright acquired the property about 1792, and owing to the increasing demands made upon the mill, at once set about the erection of a new stone on the west side of the river. In this mill, one run of stone was put in at first, a little later two and as the pressure increased, three runs of stone became necessary. Gourlay says in 1817 this mill was the best in the Province.

From the time of its erection, and as long as it was operated by the Government, a small toll was exacted at the pioneer mill to pay the daily expenses. At Kingston the grists were ground gratis, but it was felt that the saving in time to the settlers at Napanee more than compensated for the amount taken in toll. To the mill came also the Indians for flour, and it is very probable that from the name, Appeneea, evolved their word for flour. Just what was the source of the name, Appeneea, is, unfortunately not known, but from it and the Indian word, Nau-pau-nee, the transition was gradually made to the present name, Napanee, certainly a sweet and musical one.

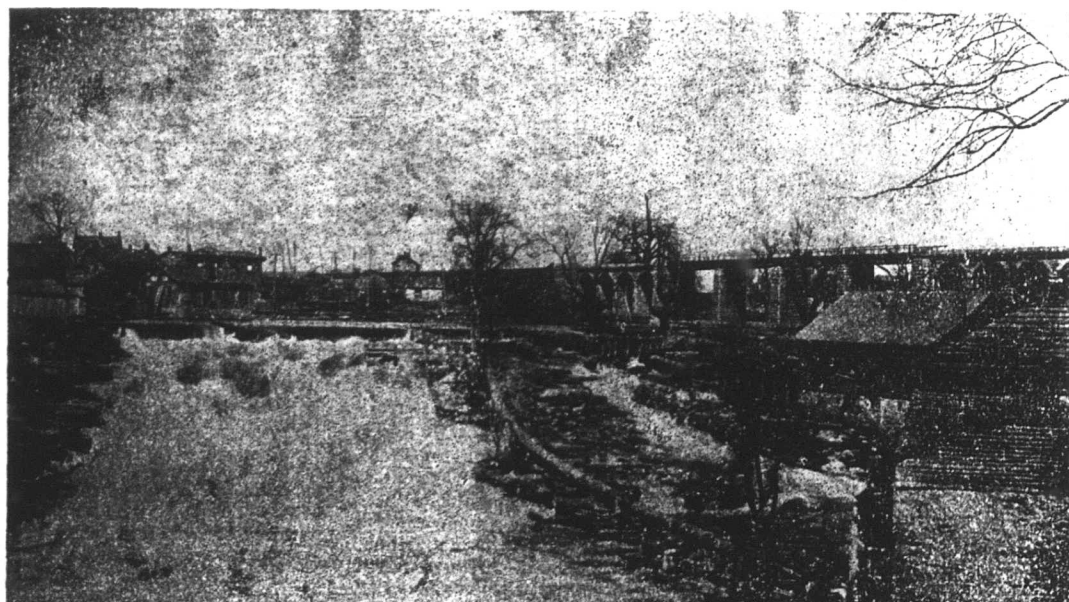

Mr. John Grange, a canny Scot, was for many years a millwright in the Cartwright mill, and in 1800, his was included in his jurisdiction, he held services in the schoolhouse fortnightly. Mr. Givens, although far advanced in years, was present at the laying of the corner stone of the handsome new St. Mary Magdalene church, and spoke of his primitive services. He told how the "precentor" was a young man whose zeal outran his skill in music and who turned out later on a much better authority in state-craft than Psalmody—the late Sir John A. McDonald. Mr. Givens was incumbent when the first church was consecrated by Bishop Strachan in 1840. Rev. Darius Dunham was the first Methodist minister, and Rev. Robert McDowall the first Presbyterian.

In the early forties, transportation was improvised. The "York" road had been macadamized and the people in the outlying district made more frequent trips to the town. On May 11th, 1844, the district Agricultural Society was formed. The institution of the Town Fair Day was in 1855, and it became the custom to bring to town cattle, horses and sheep on certain days in each month, when buyers were on hand to take what was offered for sale.

On June 11th, 1856, the corner stone of the market house and town hall was laid. To the town came Detlors, Roblins, Herrings, Denisons, Mordens, Aylesworths, McNeills, Dalys, and a host of others to take active parts in the upbuilding of the place. The late John Gibbard settled in Napanee in August, 1836, and established the well-known Gibbard Furniture Factory. He lived to see the place grow from a straggling village of a few wooden houses, with swampy surroundings to a thriving town.

Just outside the town was, until some two or three years ago, an old landmark in the shape of a covered cerned, for grists came from points as far east as Cornwall, and west as Port Hope. For three years this was the only mill, besides burned-out stumps, commonly called "plumping mills" and "homing blocks," to which the settlers had access, and they suffered many hardships in consequence.

Owing to the influx of settlers at Adolphustown and various points along the Bay of Quinte, the authorities found it necessary to seek a site for a second mill, and on the Appena river, as it was then called, they discovered an excellent water, consisting of natural falls of some thirty feet. Speedily availing themselves of the splendid facilities thus offered, Robert Clark, who had constructed the mill at Kingston, was commissioned, in 1785, to build a mill at this point. Accordingly a clearance of one and three-quarter acres was made—the first in Napanee or immediate vicinity—and a mill built of logs was raised on March 23rd, 1786.

From an old account book kept by Clark, and discovered by the late Dr. Canniff, we learn the following regarding the construction of the mill: "To clearing one acre and three quarters of land at seven dollars per acre, 3L." "March 23rd, 1786, for raising the saw mill, 2 gallons and 3 pints of rum, 7s. 6d." "May 25th, to 4 gallons and 1 quart of rum, for raising the grist mill, 7s. 6d." Again, "May 26th, to 1 quart of rum for the people at work in water at the dam," and yet again on the 29th of July the Government is charged with "3 pints of rum (for raising the fenderposts." In December of the same year, the account reads, "To making Bolt Cloth, 15s." From the latter item we may infer that the mill did not commence operations until the beginning of 1787. Naturally, this mill was a great boon to the early settlers for many miles around, for not only was the distance son, the late Wm. Grange, Esq., was born, being the first white child born in Napanee. Mr. Grange afterward settled on a farm a mile north of the town, and the family have ever since been identified with the progress and development of the place. About the year 1800 a carding mill was built on the east side of the river, and a triphammer was put up by a man named Kesler. These shortly afterward burned. Mr. Kesler then built a blacksmith shop and followed the trade of smithy for many years. About the year 1812, Allan McPherson, a son-in-law of Judge Fisher, of Adolphustown, rented the grist mill and opened a store. He carried on an extensive export business in grain, staves, logs, timber, ashes, etc., and did much toward the development of the business interests of the place.

The first survey of the town proper was made in 1832 by Samuel M. Benson, P.L.S., of Belleville. The plot contained about one-quarter of one square mile. Several surveys have since been made in accordance with town's growth. The lots on Dundas and Main streets were first taken up and building soon commenced. Among the first to build was Mr. D. Pringle, who erected an hotel which he shortly afterward sold to Mr. Miles Shorey and erected another public house on the opposite side of the street. These two hotels were the principal public houses in Napanee for many years. John V. Detlor and John Benson were among the first storekeepers. The first schoolhouse was built near the railroad bridge. This served for many years as church and town hall. Here it was that the then rising generation received their education, and here the Rev. Saltern Givens used to preach the gospel to the people. He was appointed missionary to the Mohawk and Tyendinaga Indians in 1831, and as Napanee highway bridge, a curiosity in bridge construction. It was built in 1840, good white pine being the principal material used in its construction, and until it was demolished, the upper parts remained well preserved, and in good condition. The bridge was 20 feet, centre to centre, and the length 79 feet over all, the height of top chord to bottom chord 16 feet. It was built of plank 12 feet by two and a half inches, pinned together with two-inch oak pins wherever they crossed. Any one who ever visited the town before the old bridge was replaced by the new, will still retain a vivid impression of this quaint old structure. Today, the "flour" town is very prosperous and progressive. It possesses many handsome private residences and churches. In fact the people of Napanee are known far and wide as being great church-goers. Much of its wealth is derived from the enormous quantities of grain shipped annually from this point. In the past the famous "Bay of Quinte Burley" added very materially to its prosperity. The business portion of the town is generally on and around Dundas street, which is adorned by many handsome business blocks. The stores are finely equipped. One of the best Collegiate Institute in the Province is there, besides an Academy and ward school.

The town was incorporated and made the county town of Lennox and Addington in 1864. The press is well represented by "The Express," and "Beaver." There is a handsome new postoffice, several banks, numerous factories and mills, electric plant, gas plant, waterworks and sewage; a delightful little park and library, and, in fact, the place possesses all the requisites of an up-to-date, modern town.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE AT FOOT OF NAPANEE FALLS

Foe or Friend?

Friend It Was to Be

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Bad luck had followed Joe Pebble for three years—in fact, ever since he had tired of the monotony of supporting his wife and her father on his wages as a cattle herder and had suddenly deserted them to follow the call of his old free life.

He had simply disappeared to let them think what they would of him. He had left all the money that he possessed except a single silver dollar, and he had used his own horse to ride away from them.

Bad luck had followed him in his roving. He had been unhappy in his freedom. His heart ached for the sweet companionship of Gertrude, his wife, and for the placid philosophy of the good natured old man, her father.

Today he was riding down a ravine among the Tepee hills. Once more he was free. He had discharged himself from a ranch on the western side of the watershed and was riding forth on one of those strange, restless quests for new scenes which had become a habit with him since he had deserted his wife. Happiness he never expected to regain.

He drew rein there and looked through an opening down upon a pleasant alluvial plain dotted with cattle. A low adobe ranch house was there, surrounded by barns and a corral. Smoke wreathed up from a chimney. It looked very peaceful and pleasant—the sort of home he and Gertie had help you out those clothes you got on and get you into bed in a decent way?" went on the voice, and when Joe gratefully assented the owner of the voice helped him with a woman's tenderness to undress and clothed him in clean underwear and a clean coarse night-shirt.

"I'm mightily obliged to you, stranger," murmured Joe drowsily as he sank on his pillow after swallowing a cup of hot broth.

"You're welcome," said the other solemnly, and, tiptoeing out, he closed the door.

Joe did not awake again until the next morning. He knew that the windows were wide open, for he breathed the fresh, sweet air, and he could hear the song of birds. His eyelids felt very stiff and sore, and he was grateful for the bandage that covered them.

Mr. Smith came in presently and, after a pleasant greeting to the injured man, bathed his face and hands and brought some breakfast to him.

Joe bit into a hot corn muffin, and his hand fell upon the counterpane. He turned his blindfolded eyes toward the stranger.

"Who made these muffins?" he asked in a choking voice.

There was a hesitating silence before Mr. Smith replied. Then, "My daughter made them," he replied.

"Your daughter! Why—who—excuse me," stammered Joe, "but they are like those my wife makes, and I never tasted any others like 'em!" He hastily resumed his breakfast, and the portion of his face below the bandage glowed redly.

Mr. Smith said nothing.

When the doctor appeared he declared that Joe had a little fever, and he changed his medicine. Once more Joe heard three voices in consultation in the next room. He could now recognize Smith's voice and that of the doctor, but the third one was that of a woman, pitched low and soft, and eluded his searching mind.

"Where have I heard that voice before?" he asked himself again and again as the days passed by, but the answer did not come—then.

During those long days and nights of pain and helplessness Joe Pebble had leisure to think over what he had done, and he resolved that when he recovered that he would go north again and endeavor to become reconciled to his wife and her father.

The thought of this coming journey did much to hasten his recovery.

On the evening of this particular day—a Sunday it was—he lay there alone in the room. Presently Smith came in and talked to him. They talked on various matters, and finally, Joe told him about his former life in Wyoming and ended by confiding his sin to the old man. He told it all—of his wild longing for freedom, how he had fought it for days before making up his mind to leave his wife and how, after the irrevocable step had been taken, of the remorse he had suffered.

"I think of them two helpless ones day and night," he groaned. "What has become of them? A coyote wouldn't have acted meaner'n I did. Don't God ever give folks a chance to make good when they've sinned?"

The elder man did not answer for a long time. Then he arose and bent over the bed for a brief instant. "If

Playing Coachman

It Created Important
Complications

By EDNA CRUIKSHANK

Three young men sat about a table, guzzling and smoking, at the Meadowcreek Hunt club. They were Bert Stevens, Jim Galloway and Ned Howland. It was not the hunting season, and these gentlemen, whose lives were absorbed in hunting, horses and hounds, had little amusement, so they lounged, chaffed one another and made bets whenever they could find an uncertainty. They could well afford to do so because every one of them was rich. The subject turned upon what they would do if they should have to go to work.

"I would hire for a chauffeur," said Stevens.

"If I went in for that sort of thing," said Howland, "I'd hire for a coachman. I have no fancy for a dead machine, but I love a live horse."

"I'd like to see you in livery," said Galloway.

"I'll bet you a thousand," said Stevens to Howland, "that you can't pass yourself off for a coachman."

"I'll bet you a thousand I can."

Stevens took out a pocket check book, wrote a check and handed it to Galloway, daring Howland to cover it.

"But I should have to prove that I can, and that would involve getting a situation or keeping it for a stipulated time."

"So you would. It would be a lark, wouldn't it?"

"I don't know that it would."

"Try it, Ned," urged the stakeholder.

Howland didn't consent just then, but he did later, and an additional $1,000 was left in Galloway's hands as stakes for the following bet: Howland to secure a place as coachman and keep it four weeks without any member of the family for whom he worked knowing that he was a gentleman. But if his identity was discovered through any means not in accord with the spirit in which the bet was made the bet was to be considered a draw. When all was settled Stevens said:

"I'll bet you another thousand, Ned, that if there is an unmarried woman in the family you serve between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five you run away with her within your term of service."

"Done," said Howland, and Galloway was handed the additional stake by each party to the wager.

It was not long after this that Mr. Edmond Delano, who had gone, with his family, to his country place for the summer, received a note from an employment agency that an excellent opportunity had occurred to hire an elegant coachman. Mr. Delano directed the man to be sent up at once. He was surprised to see a handsome young fel-planned before. A lump came into his throat, and he brushed his brown hand across his wet eyes. Then his young face sank into those stern, brooding lines that had replaced the old careless expression.

Joe Tribble, as he called himself, rode on. A few yards farther on his horse stumbled and fell so suddenly that Joe was pitched over his head, to fall in a crushed heap among some rocks. He lay very still, while the horse scrambled to his feet, sniffed at his master's unconscious form and then limped away for assistance, whinnying pitifully.

Joe opened his eyes upon darkness. There was a bandage over his eyes, and he could see nothing, but he knew that he rested upon a soft bed. A large cool hand touched his wrist, and a finger pressed upon his pulse.

"Doctor," Joe huskily whispered. "Aha!" said a mellow voice. "Coming around, are you? Feel pretty well banged to pieces?"

"Pretty sore," admitted Joe. "What's the matter with my eyes?"

"You fell on a lot of broken rocks and got some splinters in your eyes. You can't come into the light until they've healed up a bit. Nothing to worry about; mere scratches. You have got a broken ankle, though."

"Where am I?" was Joe's next question.

"At a ranch close by the spot where your horse threw you. Pretty intelligent beast, that horse! Came limping down here to the ranch and almost told Mr. Smith what had happened. You can bet he's well taken care of too!"

"Poor old Starbrow!" murmured Joe. Then, turning to the doctor, he asked in a low voice, "Where can I stay—here?"

"Oh, yes! You can't be moved until your ankle is better," said the doctor decisively.

The doctor left the room, and Joe heard him talking to some one in another room. There were other voices that seemed to vibrate strangely on his hearing. What memories of the past they revived! Whose voices did they resemble?

He tormented himself with these questions until he fell asleep from sheer exhaustion. He was awakened after a refreshing sleep by the sound of a pump handle creaking outside. Shortly afterward a heavy, deliberate football entered his room, and he was conscious that some one was bending over him.

"Well, stranger," said a deep, resonant voice, "I reckon you're awake now?"

"Who are you?" was Joe's hurried question.

There was a little pause before the answer came. "My name's Smith. Why?"

"Nothing, only I thought it sounded like—somebody I used to know," murmured Joe, sinking back upon his pillow.

"I wonder if you wouldn't like me to take good when they've sinned?"

The elder man did not answer for a long time. Then he arose and bent over the bed for a brief instant. "I believe he does, son; I believe he will," he said solemnly, and Joe heard him pass from the room and close the door.

From the room overhead he heard the murmur of voices long into the night. They were talking when he fell asleep, and once he started wide awake because he thought he heard a woman's sobs. "Don't cry, Gertie; everything is all right," he murmured drowsily and went to sleep again.

The next day the doctor came and removed the bandage.

After the doctor had gone Joe waited impatiently for Mr. Smith to come in. He was eager to see the face of the man who had been so kind to him.

All at once a bulky form filled the doorway, and Mr. Smith's slow, deliberate step approached the bed. In the dim light Joe's eager eyes did not at first recognize him; then he sat bolt upright in bed and stared with whitening face into the kind, forgiving eyes of—his father-in-law.

"Father!" he murmured brokenly and hid his face in his hands.

"Son!" said the older man solemnly, and he laid his hand upon Joe's dark hair in the old familiar caress, for the two had been very fond of each other.

"It has been you all along?" asked Joe after awhile.

"Yes," said the other. And in a few words he told the repentant man that after his desertion Gertrude and he had left Wyoming and come down into Texas to start anew. The old man had a little money, with which he bought the ranch. They had never expected to see Joe again. When they recognized him in the injured stranger whom Starbrow had led them to they had hastily assumed the name of Smith for the time being.

"And Gertrude?" asked Joe brokenly. "Can she remember me and believe me to become what she's worthy of?"

"I'm here, Joe!" came Gertrude's voice in answer.

portantly had occurred to one of the elegant coachman. Mr. Delano directed the man to be sent up at once. He was surprised to see a handsome young fellow of athletic build, though shabbily dressed.

"Your name?" asked Mr. Delano.

"Patrick Horne."

"You're not Irish, are you? You have no brogue."

"My grandfather was an Irishman."

So he was and a baronet.

Ned Howland was engaged and when he reported for duty appeared in a brand new livery, in which he looked more like a major general than a coachman. There were five young ladies in the family between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five, so that his bet with Stevens should have been five to one in Howland's favor, and as every one of the girls was a beauty even greater odds than this should have been given.

The eldest daughter, Miss Margaret Delano, was fully the coachman's age. Besides, she was rather strong minded, having charge of a section devoted to archaeology in the woman's club of which she was a member. Miss Edith was twenty-three and eminently sensible.

Miss Annette was twenty and devoted to society. She directed the social affairs of the family. Then came Miss Gertrude, inclined to be lackadaisical, while the baby girl, Miss Jacqueline, or Jack, as she was universally called, aged seventeen, was the very flower of the family garden.

Since each and every one of these young ladies was attractive it was evident that Howland, to use a Hibernicism, had walked into a hornet's nest. The eldest treated him as a coachman, and as a coachman he was in no danger from her; but, as for the rest of the girls, from the first there were constant bickerings among them as to which one should drive out with him, he either holding the reins or sitting in the rumble.

There was constant danger of Mr. Howland running across some one who knew him, though he had shaved off a full beard, and his livery also changed his appearance. Fortunately he knew no one in the place where he served, and the Delanos were an old family, not inclined to mix much with the commercial aristocracy of the present day. But one afternoon Stevens and Galloway, who knew where Howland was, appeared on the street as he was riding by in the rumble of Miss Jacqueline's pony cart. The girl was turned square away from the pony, chatting and laughing with her footman, when he espied his two friends looking at him, their sides shaking with laughter. He was leaning forward at the time, gazing into the girl's sparkling eyes, but on catching sight of his cronies straightened up, folded his arms and became a veritable lackey.

As soon as Ned got back to the stable he went to his room over it and wrote his friends that if they ever appeared in the place again he would call the bet off. This scared them off, as far as appearing openly on the forbidden ground was concerned, but so eager were they to see the game that they made themselves up in different disguises and took frequent trips there for the purpose. Though Howland did not know it, many a time when he had forgotten that he was a lackey and was deeply engrossed with a young

A pretty and practical use to which to put Turkish toweling is an attractive collar and cuff set for the coat or even for the frock of linen. The collar is cut on the lines of the simple Dutch collar and scalloped at edge with a colored floss. Above the edge dots of color are used, and running from four or five of the scallop points is a little vine effect. Loops of velvet matching the color used for embroidery hold the collar together at front, and about the edge of the velvet loops appears a narrow scallop of Irish crochet.

The cuffs to complete these sets are made about three and one-half inches in depth and finished with scallops, dots and vines to match the collar.

THE SMALL FRUIT SUPPLY.

Very Few Farms Have Enough to Keep Home Tables Filled.

Very few farms are supplied with half enough small fruit. In the way of strawberries I have had all we could use for many years, but it is accomplished by setting out a new patch each alternate spring, says a correspondent of Orange Judd Farmer.

Two hundred or 300 plants will be enough to set a bed that will supply twice as many berries needed by the largest family. I always set that many because they ripen in a busy time and then we can get them picked on shares and have plenty for our own use. Some one not so fortunately situated has enough by picking ours, and it costs neither of us an outlay of cash. I raise the berries, the other fellow gathers them. I have followed the same plan with the raspberries for the last few years.

Currants are not often found on farm fruit plots. They are a good fruit for some purposes, and almost every farmer's family could dispose of a few gallons of them in pies, jelly or even with sugar and cream when dead ripe.

I have a nice patch of the seedless blackberries. It is of long bearing, and if some nurserymen were advertising it they would call it an ever bearing fruit, for it stays in fruit for a long time. I like it also on account of the lack of seeds.

Of course grapes are a standard fruit, and the old Concord is found everywhere. There are many varieties that will grow in most localities. As local conditions have much to do with the problem, it is best to consult your nearest nurseryman. Put out some white ones, some of the red ones, both early and late, but do not fool with the tender sorts. Busy farmers do not have the time nor inclination to lay down the vines and cover them with dirt, as some do in order to fruit the tender sorts.

WANT FRUIT? SPRAY.

Everybody likes fruit. Fruit can no longer be grown without spraying. Nobody likes to spray. And so we are up against it. It is spray or go without fruit. Now is the time to study this matter and find what style of sprayer is needed for our own circumstances. One thing is essential—no matter whether it be a hand sprayer or a power sprayer, the force must be sufficient and the nozzle of the kind which will deliver the spray in a fine mist and send it with force enough to enter the calyx.—Iowa Homestead.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

ONE reason probably why women are taking to wearing their husbands' things is that the women think a man ought to be of some convenience about the house.

It is better to be right than wrong, but there are so many people who can't be either.

The self made man isn't in the least inclined to keep the secret of where such a fine job was turned out.

Even the man who is made of money does hate to see a bill collector coming about.

Probably the reason why a woman would rather go to a reception than to do the week's washing is because she considers the reception costume more becoming than the washday sort.

Any man finds it easy to be honest when it is pleasant and profitable.

Adam may have beaten all the rest of us to it, but he certainly had a lot to learn.

Marriage is full of accidents and surprises, but you can always count on rent and the gas bill.

It is really getting so these days that a bride counts on wearing one thing at her first wedding and another at some succeeding wedding.

A philosopher is the fellow that stands by and watches the outcome of affairs with only a theoretical interest in the same.

Looking Backward.

Sometimes I think I'd like to be a boy again; but, say, I couldn't bring myself to care. For games I used to play. A bag of marbles and a top, Perhaps a ball and bat— How could I spend a half a day In playing one old cat?

I would resent it too, I think, To have my nose and ears Scrubbed daily by my mother's hand For half a dozen years; To have to tuck a napkin in Around my little neck, Lest on my newest suit of clothes I should let fall a speck.

And then the errands to be run Would bring me little joy. I think that I can hear them yet Exclaim, "We'll send a boy." To hunt up slippers, pick up chips Or give the calf a drink— That it would bring me happiness I don't exactly think.

It's nice to have the youth and strength. The fresher point of view; It's nice to have the appetite, But there are drawbacks too. And, while I would be full of life And might enjoy my grub, I can't be both a boy and man, And really that's the rub.

So. Wellington, B.C. — "For a year during the Change of Life I was all run down. I was really too weak to walk and was very despondent and thought I was going to die, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier my health and strength returned. I am very thankful to you and praise your medicine.

I have advised several women who suffered as I did to try your remedies. You may publish this if you wish." — Mrs. DAVID R. MORRIS, South Wellington, Vancouver Island, B.C.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. We know of no other medicine which has such a record of success as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than 30 years it has been the standard remedy for woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and we believe it is unequalled for women during the period of change of life.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

In Fig. 2 the splicer is seen in position on the wire. The arrow indicates the direction in which to turn to make the splice. A pair of large pincers or a vise should be used to hold the two wires between the collis while turning the splicer. In Fig. 3 the splice is shown as finished. The length of the handle may vary. If the splicer is to be used for net wire, of course the handle cannot be longer than the width of the mesh; otherwise six or seven inches is about right for No. 8 wire. If it is to be used only for small wire the length of the handle should be reduced for the sake of convenience.—Iowa Homestead.

Straw, stinky manure makes an ideal mulching fertilizer for both young and old apple trees. A great many are literally dying from starvation. This coarse manure will conserve moisture and fertility.

While sandy soils are probably good for strawberries, any soil not too rich will bring good results. The land should be well manured and thoroughly cultivated.

Long Island gardeners have been shipping hampers of assorted vegetables to New York families. A uniform price of $1.50 a hamper (holding more than a bushel) is charged the year round. The plan is successful, although used on a small scale.

Remember that the wood ashes that come from the cook stove, fireplace or furnace are the best kind of fertilizer for the orchard, lawn or garden.

The First In the World.

The combining of the reconstructive with the tonic treatment in the cure of diseases was first embodied in that wonderful medicine, Merrill's System Tonic. The blood is purified, new blood is made. The nerves, muscles and tissues of the heart, stomach, liver and kidneys are toned and strengthened and nature is then enabled to throw off the disease which has been ravishing the body. The thousands of cases of constipation, catarrh, chronic rheumatism and general weakness already cured proves System Tonic a wonderful medicine. All Druggists, 50c or postpaid from The Merrill Medicine Co., Merrill Building, Toronto.

Travers replied:

"I have worried over this matter and what I say will be from my feeling for you, Mr. Commissioner, and my admiration of you. Before going to Ottawa, I was told by a party, by whom I cannot say, that I had better take $3,000 with me and give it to Mr. Peter Ryan. I went down without the $3,000, but I put a check in an envelope addressed to Mr. Ryan. I marked it 'C' and on the back put the number of Mr. Ryan's room. I put in my card, saying I would pay it in Toronto.

"About six weeks later, the check was duly presented to me at my bank counter, and I gathered together the cash and paid it."

Mr. Hodgins asked: "Do you know who got the money?"

"No, I do not," replied Travers.

Travers said he had met Ryan in the rotunda of the hotel when he had asked Calvert for an introduction. Ryan had said he might put in a word for him and had suggested Emerson.

With barely a moment's preliminary explanation Travers declared that acting on instructions he had taken $3,000 to Ottawa to be paid to Mr. Peter Ryan, registrar of East Toronto. He had marked it "C" addressed it to Ryan and there his part had ended. What became of it he neither knew nor wanted to know.

Mr. Peter Ryan, on the stand, violently declared his innocence. Waving his arms voriferously and offering himself and affairs for investigation, he reiterated his absolute innocence of any connection with the transaction or any knowledge of it.

Mr. Ryan was called to the witness stand.

"I am innocent of connection as a babe in its mother's arms. I have never seen the check. I never took a room in Ottawa and I never stayed overnight," said Mr. Ryan. "I know nothing of the check, and I never saw it or the envelope. I never heard of it."

with the exception of a three hours recess, balloting in a vain effort to pick a candidate, and adjourned at 12.43 a.m. Governor Wilson gained steadily on Champ Clark throughout the day, but after passing the 500 mark, while the Speaker went far below his initial vote last Friday morning, the tide turned a little just before midnight, and on the 42nd ballot, the New Jersey governor fell off a couple, while Clark went forward in the same proportion. The vote for Oscar Underwood fluctuated within ten of the 100 mark.

Speaker Clark disappeared from Washington yesterday, and for a time nobody could tell just where he had gone. He was badly needed, as both Houses of Congress had met to extend the appropriations, so that the business of the Government could go on.

Late last evening, however, it was announced that he was here at the residence of Mayor Preston, and that he had been in consultation with his Missouri leaders.

Two attempts to adjourn were made before midnight. One was withdrawn as soon as made and the other went to a roll call, but as leaders of both sides were voting against it, it was withdrawn, and the 42nd ballot went on. This gave Wilson 494, Clark 430, Underwood 104, Harmon 27, Bryan 1-2, Kern 1, Foss 23, J. Hamilton Lewis of Chicago 1.

The disaster came so suddenly that there are few able to describe what really happened. A few minutes before five o'clock it was one of the brightest of Sunday afternoons.

Suddenly, an ominous cloud swept in circles from the southwest. Rain was coming and few regretted the fact. Back of the Parliament Buildings the great black mass was sweeping. Suddenly it parted, one-half swept eastward and the other continued straight along its path. In the twinkling of an eye the storm broke on the lake.

With it was the torrent. Boats and canoes were upset and pleasure-seeker were plunged to the bottom of the lake. How many are there may never be known. It is expected that the death list in the water will be large.

From McIntyre street to Scarth street the cloud devastated everything in its path. In that district and Southern Victoria avenue the death list has not been compiled. Sweeping over Victoria avenue the storm continued its course. The Methodist Church was utterly wrecked and after it the Y. W. C. A., the Public Library, the Presbyterian Church, the Baptist Church.

Many of the large wholesale houses are a total or partial loss. The Capital City Flour Mills, Toronto Type Foundry, Ackerman Building, Gaar-Scott, Cushing Bros., H. W. Laird Co.
warehouse, are among the wrecked.
Back of this district many of the comfortable homes of the laboring men working in this district were totally destroyed.

Large gangs of volunteers are now engaged in the clearing up of debris, the further rescue of bodies and the fitting up of houses for the use of the survivors.

Engineer Allan is at the head of this work, and has fifteen gangs of carpenters busy.

Another large gang of workmen is busy cutting off the wires of the devastated area and stringing them west, that the people west may have lights.

By to-night it is proposed that practically every house in which people are living, will have light.

Supply departments have been established at the Victoria School and the North Side Fire Hall and competent men placed in charge of them, so that while every case of need will be met, nothing will be wasted. The heads of the local trade unions came early to the City Hall and offered the services of their bodies in the work. A line of special constables has been thrown into a cordon about the stricken area. Everyone is compelled to get a permit before being allowed to visit the ruins.

SEVERAL DROWN.

Water's Toll of Death Is Large on the Holiday.

Hamilton, July 2.—Antonio Kopetsky and Mary Sawonsky, two Poles, who lived near the steel plant, were drowned in the bay shortly after ten o'clock last night as a result of a collision between a gasoline launch and a rowboat in which they were rowing. The launch, which was occupied by T. R. Woodhouse, 49 Woodbine crescent, and Albert S. King, 159 Dun-durn street, and some young ladies struck the rowboat in the darkness.

The boat was immediately upset, and before assistance could be rendered, the two foreigners were drowned.

Up to two o'clock this morning the bodies had not been recovered.

Kopetsky rented the boat from Charles Green, who has a boathouse near the high-level bridge.

Girl Is Drowned.

Toronto, July 2.—Annie Richardson, aged 29, was drowned in the lake near Mimico about 10 o'clock Saturday night. The young woman was being paddled toward the Humber river by her fiancé, William Rushton, aged 23, when becoming excited at the sea that was starting to run, she sprang from her seat and capsize the canoe opposite post 17.

Rushton immediately placed her on his back and started to swim. After spending ten minutes in a vain attempt to reach land, the young woman discovered that they were going farther out, and became hysterical.
She grasped Rushton around the throat, shut off his breath and pulled him with her beneath the water.
What happened after that the young man has no recollection. Rushton was rescued by cottagers.

Major Catto Drowned.

Toronto, July 2.—Major Charles J.
Catto, only son of John Catto, the well-known Toronto retail merchant of King street east, was drowned at Rideau Ferry, a summer resort on the Rideau Lakes about six miles from Perth, yesterday evening. He was out on the lake in a canoe by himself, when in some way he lost his balance and fell overboard. He could not swim. His body was recovered shortly after the accident, but life was extinct. Doctors worked to resuscitate, but to no avail. Mr. Catto was holidaying at the ferry and had been there but a few days.

Drowning at Chatham.

Chatham, July 2.—One drowning fatality and two minor accidents marked the opening of Chatham's old home week.

Within a hundred feet of two thousand pleasure-seekers, John Mulcey, a young Englishman, was drowned in the Thames, opposite Tecumseh Park, at 10.30 last night. A sacred band concert was in prospect at the park, and the music drowned his cries for help. He was attempting to swim across the river, when his

No Use For Literal "Hell."

Toronto, July 2.—Frank W. Nanton, managing partner of the Nanton Bros. Co., of this city, while speaking for the Toronto Bible Class at the Monday session of the International Bible Students Association Convention, now being held in Toronto, made quite a stir by calling for an official public repudiation of the so-called doctrine of a literal
"hell fire," or "lake of fire and brimstone," as a place of punishment for the wicked and requested this convention to inaugurate some method enabling every Protestant minister in Canada to fearlessly make a public declaration of his personal belief on the "hell fire" doctrine.

The sensation following his sudden statement of the details of the famous $3,000 marked check which has baffled the commission for months sent a thrill of surprise about the court room.

Don't do anything till you do it, and when you've done it stop doing it.—
William Gillette.

Moosejaw Rushing Aid.

Moose Jaw, Sask., July 2.—The Board of Trade here have chartered a special train and are sending a trainload of tents and supplies, which will to a certain extent relieve the suffering caused by the cyclone.

Birdwoman Killed.

Boston, July 2.—Miss Harriet B. Quimby of New York, the first woman to win an aviator's license in America, and the first woman to cross the English Channel in an aeroplane, was instantly killed, with her passenger, W. A. P. Willard, manager of the Boston Aviation Meet, at Atlantic last night, when her Bleriot monoplane fell into Dorchester Bay from a height of a thousand feet.

Miss Quimby started a volplane, when a gust of wind caught the tail of the monoplane, throwing the machine up perpendicular. For an instant it poised there. Then Willard's body was thrown clear of the chassis, followed almost immediately by Miss Quimby's. Hurling over and over, the two bodies shot downward, striking the water twenty feet from shore. The monoplane then plunged down. The water was only five feet deep. Men from the Savin Hill Yacht Club near by were on the spot quickly, and leaping overboard from their motor boats hauled the two bodies out of the mud, into which they had sunk deeply. Death was probably instantaneous.

To Celebrate Peace Centenary.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., July 2.—Invitations have been issued to the Duke of Connaught, Hon. R. L. Borden, President Taft, Vice-President Sherman, Sir James Whitney, Theodore Roosevelt, W. J. Bryan and many others to attend a peace centenary luncheon, to be held at the International Hotel, Niagara Falls, N.Y., on July 4. This luncheon is to be international in scope, devoid of political significance, and is intended to be a forerunner of a big peace celebration in 1914-15, marking the culmination of one hundred years of peace between the United States and Great Britain.

The luncheon is to be followed by an international concert by a massed band of one hundred and fifty pieces, consisting of the 74th Regimental Band of Buffalo, N.Y., and the 91st Highlanders of Hamilton, Ont.

The Baldheaded Eagle.

The staid, dignified and homely bald-headed eagle, the glorious emblem of the American republic, mates but once and lives with his one mate until he or she dies. If left a widower—even a young widower—the baldheaded eagle never mates again. He remains alone and disconsolate in the nest on the rocky crag or in the branches of a tall pine that formed his domicile while his mate was alive. No other female eagle can tempt him to forsake his disconsolate life.

Wasted.

"I always was unlucky," he said, with a weary sigh.

"What's the matter now, old man?" his friend asked.

"I've spent over $500 on havin' my boy taught to play the fiddle, and now his hair's all comin' out."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Presentation and Address.

Mr. Neil Mathewson, who is moving from Napanee to Toronto, was presented on Saturday, June 22nd, with a handsome walking stick and pair of solid gold glasses by the employees of the Gibbard Furniture Co., who assembled at the factory for that purpose and read him the following address :

Napanee, June 22nd, 1912.

Neil Mathewson, Esq., Napanee.

Dear Sir,—We, your fellow-employees of the Gibbard Furniture Co., regret to learn that you have decided to leave us and move to Toronto.

During the 27 years that you have been connected with this firm, you have watched it rise under able management from a very small concern to be one of the best in Canada. Your pleasant, quiet ways during this time have greatly endeared you to us, and your earnest devotion to your work will long be a pattern to the rest of us, and we heartily wish you every success in your new location.

As a slight token of our appreciation we would ask you to accept this walking stick and pair of glasses, coupled with the earnest wish that you may long be spared to use them. We hope, that as time goes on, you will often take this stick and while enjoying a walk you will think of your old friends in Napanee ; and if you find that things do not go as well as you anticipate, that you will put on your glasses and come back to Gibbard's and resume your work among us.

Again wishing you and yours all the good things this poor world can furnish, and hoping to see you often in spite of the distance between us, we are,

Yours faithfully,

On behalf of "The Boys" :

H. E. Moucks
Wm. Norris
H. Meng
Jas. Douglas
Robt. Solmes
Chas. Lowry.

Mr. Mathewson was also the recipient of a very handsome arm chair presented to him by Messrs. W. T. and Geo. Gibbard.

An open open programme meeting of the United Empire Loyalist Chapter I. O. D. E. was held at the Town Hall on the evening of June 27th.

The decorations were simple consisting of a tasteful arrangement of British flags about the platform, but were in accord with the spirit and aim of the order.

The Regent, Mrs. A. T. Harshaw, acting as chairman, made a few preliminary remarks introducing the two ladies who were to give the travels, and who occupied seats on the platform with her.

The programme was opened by Miss Jean Daly with Meyer-Helmut's beautiful Nocturne, which she played with much expression.

Mrs. M. C. Bogert gave us a most interesting account of a bit of her Mediterranean trip, taking us from Naples to Cario and the pyramids by way of Greece, Turkey and Port Said, touching also at the Island of Rhodes, which has since been the scene of an Carl Wilson, aged 12, and Alfred Beasley, aged 18, were drowned in Pictou harbor Tuesday afternoon. They fell out of a punt while endeavoring to reach a bird's nest on the outside of the boathouse. One was on other's shoulders, and the punt drifted from underneath them.

J. F. Cairns' Store Burned.

On Saturday last the J. F. Cairns department store at Saskatoon was totally destroyed by fire involving a loss of about half a million dollars. The loss is fairly well covered by insurance. J. F. Cairns, whose department store has been destroyed by fire at Saskatoon, is an example for the spirit and the growing power of the West, since the tide of progress commenced to flow, about a decade ago. In 1902 Saskatoon was a railway station and a string of tents along the bank of the North Saskatchewan. At that time the Barr Colonists were being deposited there, and finding it very new and strange. Then J. F. Cairns and wife arrived. Mr. Cairns had been a high school teacher in Chatham, then the manager of the local opera house. In about 1897 he came to Toronto to edit the Canadian Wheelman, the monthly magazine, and organ of the Canadian Wheelman Association. The bicycle boom was then at its height. It fell away shortly after, and the magazine never got on its feet. J. F. Cairns left town. For a while he was located in Buffalo. Then he managed the opera house in London. Next heard of he had turned up in Saskatoon, where he and his wife opened a little shack store to sell bread and confectionery. That store, inside ten years, keeping pace with the growth of Saskatoon—or rather making the pace for the town and the whole district—had become the largest store between Winnipeg and the Pacific coast, with a business, it is said, of over half a million dollars, running full-page advertisements in the local newspapers and issuing a big catalogue for mail order customers throughout the Saskatchewan Valley.

Mediterranean trip, taking us from Naples to Cario and the pyramids by way of Greece, Turkey and Port Said, touching also at the Island of Rhodes, which has since been the scene of an encounter between the Turkish and Italian forces. Mrs. Bogart not only gave us a graphic description of the picturesque features of the countries and their historic buildings and ruins, but also a pleasing picture of the gay life of the street and of the bazaar of the east. She showed us several curiosities worn by man—or rather woman—and beast, which made her descriptions more vivid and interesting: among them was a peculiar face veil worn by the Turkish women, and queer necklaces made of beads and bits of brass which were hung about the necks of horses and donkeys in Greece. We all enjoyed the trip from start to finish, and hope at some future time to be taken to Palestine.

Miss Evelyn Rockwell charmed the audience with her singing and had to respond to an enthusiastic encore. Such register and so fully developed a voice is rarely found in so young a child, and we feel sure that we shall hear from her in the future among the great singers of her day.

Miss Gordon gave an amusing recitation which was enjoyed by all.

Miss Helen Grange gave an excellent and thoughtful talk on her impressions of Paris and its people which she had evidently studied thoroughly from every point of view during the many months she spent there last winter. Unlike the usual tourist who chooses the more modern and Americanized portion of the city, Miss Grange was wise enough to live among the true Parisians, and consequently became familiar with their real life. She attended lectures at the famous old college of Sorbonne which was founded early in the 13th century, and whose halls of learning are still filled with scholars and students from all parts of the Globe. She made us familiar with the beautiful avenues and parks, magnificent buildings, squares, bridges and arches about which so much romance and history are woven. Her delineation of the characteristics of the French people—men, women and children—showed that she not only knew her Paris—as Paris—but understood its people as well. It was a most able and interesting description and was thoroughly appreciated by all.

The programme very fittingly closed with the spirited song "Hail to the King," sung in her usual finished manner by Mrs. VanLoven and chorus composed of Mesdames J. G. Daly, Simpson, U. M. Wilson, and Miss Constance Grange, the audience also joining in the chorus of the last two verses. The accompanist was Mrs. F. L. Hooper.

The U. E. Loyalist chapter wishes to thank all the ladies, both members and non-members, who so kindly contributed their time and talents to make the meeting a success, and also the audience for their attendance on so warm an evening.

Enough and really some to spare.

It greets you with the morning light

And follows you to bed at night.

Just open your ears and you will hear,

For this is presidential year.
